

■ Messages can be sent from one place to another

© Commonwealth of Australia 2006

■ What we do and what it means

'Look, you've got a letter. What does it say?'

When we talk about the mail we've received, children learn that written language can carry a message from one place to another.

Later, they will learn that there are different kinds of messages. Some are cards and letters from family and friends; others may be advertising or bills.

An Australian Government initiative, funded by the Department of Education, Science and Training