

■ Drawing and scribbling lead to writing

© Commonwealth of Australia 2006

■ What we do and what it means

'What have you drawn this time?'

Letting children scribble and draw helps them learn to write.

Over time, children learn that writing is a particular kind of 'drawing' that carries a message.

Later, children will learn that writing can be used to make lists, fill out forms and to tell people about things in stories and letters.

An Australian Government initiative, funded by the Department of Education, Science and Training